Gospel Temperance in the Open Air.

The open-air gospel temperance meetings, held every Sunday afternoon, at 2:30 o'clock, at Military Park, under the direction of Bails Campbell and Frank Wolfe, are proving very successful. Every meeting brings a larger audience and increased interest. To-morrow afternoon the meeting will be addressed by Rev. G. Mitchell, pastor of the Fifth Presbyterian Church. There will be special music for this occasion. The public is invited.

A Memento from the Corner-Stone.

W. R. Grimes sent to the President yesterday a model of a shoe-maker's last made from a piece of the monument's cornerstone. It was neatly finished and made more attractive by having its pieces held together with blue ribbon. The President appreciated the gift as a memento of the ceremonies in which he took part the day before.

GEN. HARRISON'S REGIMENTS

The Last Day of the President's Visit Here Spent with His Old Comrades.

Reunions of the Survivors of the Seventieth Regiment and the First Brigade—The President's Departure Yesterday.

The termination of President Harrison's visit to his old home was marked, yesterday, by a reunion with the soldiers of his old command, under circumstances which made it doubly pleasant to those who took part in the exercises. The survivors of the Seventieth Indiana Infantry, which regiment was raised by the President, had fixed the date of their fifteenth annual gathering here, and chosen their old commander as their presiding officer. Many of the survivors of other regiments of his former brigade took occasion to hold a brigade reunion at the same time and place. The result was that when the veterans of the Seventieth were called to order at Tomlinson Hall yesterday morning more than two hundred of them were present, and scattered through the audience were perhaps as many more of the Harrison brigade, including representatives of the One-hundred-and-second, One-hundred-and-fifth and One-hundred-and-twenty-ninth Illinois, and the Seventy-ninth Ohio. As might be supposed, most of the survivors are men who have crossed the dividing line which separates the cloverfields of youth from the less juicy pasture lots of later years. A good many of the heads were thatched with the unmetable snow, and the foot-prints of the crow who begins his peregrinations on the human countenance after middle life is reached, were plainly discernible around many of the eyes, but most of the veterans bore their age like a lusty winter—frosty but kindly—and when, at 10 A. M., Col. Samuel Merrill appeared by the President's side, he mastered him to rule over the assembly there was a season of cheering that showed no scarcity of enthusiasm or lung power.

The Whitehall Band, one of the best organizations of its kind in the State, furnished some fine music, after which Gen. Thomas J. Moran, now Commissioner of the State, offered a fervent prayer, speaking the blessing of Providence upon those present. In the absence of Mayor Denny, who had gone to attend the unveiling of the Soldiers' monument at Elmer, City Attorney W. L. Taylor heartily welcomed the veterans. He said:

Mr. President and Soldiers of the Seventieth—As you are the good people of this city, you are entitled to a special mention. You are justly renowned for your valor, and your recollection of the day of the front, and will never forget the heroic achievement of defense of the flag. With such a regiment—so manned, equipped and officered, and with such a record, we are not surprised to be here today by your presence among us.

During the fatal conflict of which you marched, this city was a gateway to and from the south. Whenever an Indiana regiment crossed the line, it was here that the eager and ready, and the bare of trumpets, the people of this city gave them an unstinted and substantial blessing; and when, after the battle, the ranks were filled with the wounded and the dead, the same citizens met them with the tender welcome of a faithful comrade. And now, almost a quarter of a century after that struggle for national supremacy, and when the country is so different, looking into the faces of new and strange, with surroundings so changed, you come again and find the fever of patriotism still on.

Yours was a fortunate regiment; fortunate not only in the patriotic spirit that pervaded the regiment, but for the excellent and the splendid leadership of your regimental officers. Worthily as you acted the part of the faithful soldier, you were also the part of the faithful citizen. You were the first to give your country in time of peace. With conspicuous fidelity, the surviving veterans of the Seventieth have kept the memory of their service alive, and the very responsible position of a private citizen in a free republic to the chief magistracy of the State and beloved country.

The people of this city have always been steadfastly true to the cause you helped to make sacred by sacrifice. We are proud to have you here, and we ask you to come and go at will.

As the cable of years, link by link, slips away and is put out into eternity, and the ranks of your regiment are thinned, be assured that the patriotic people of this city will greet the constantly lessening number with that cheerful and unflinching welcome that springs free and full, warmed from the heart of the faithful friend. So shall we continue until the last survivor of the honored regiment shall have made his final and only surrender.

The address of welcome was heartily applauded throughout, and when President Harrison rose to reply there was another burst of cheers. The latter spoke slowly and deliberately, and with a dignified simplicity that was impressive. His words were as follows:

Mr. Taylor—The survivors of the Seventieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, now assembled in annual reunion, have great reason for great gratification, the cordial words of welcome which you have addressed to us. We have never doubted the hospitality of the citizens of this great city, and have several times found our reunions here, and if we have more frequently sought the quiet town in this congressional district, where the regiment was organized, it has only been because we could be better taken care of by ourselves than was possible in this city. You will not think this selfish instinct when I tell you that, as the years go on, these reunions of our regiment become more and more a family affair, and as in the gathering of the scattered members of a family reunion, the family reunion, we have loved, when we get together as comrades, to be somewhat apart, that we might enjoy each other. It has been pleasant, I am sure, to link this annual reunion with the great event of yesterday. It did us good to meet with our comrades of the past, those who were with us, and others who were not, but who carried the same flag under which we marched, in these exercises connected with the dedication of the monument that marks our regimental distinction. [Applause.]

Let me express, comrades, my own gratification at being able to meet with you. The change which was made in the time of our assembly has made this possible. We are glad to spend the moments with you to-day, to forget altogether for the time being that I am a public officer, and to remember only that I am your comrade and friend. [Applause.]

If those having charge now will announce some proper arrangement by which I can take by the hand the members not only of the Seventieth Indiana, but any comrades of the First Brigade, who have been in the army of the Union to-day, I would be glad to conform to their wishes. It is perhaps possible that, without leaving the hall, simply by an exchange of seats, this may be accomplished, and when that is done there may yet be time before we proceed with some other of the exercises upon the program.

Before the speaking began Colonel Merrill suggested that as the President could not be with them in the afternoon, it might be well to have a recess before the noon intermission, to enable him to shake hands with those present at the annual reunion, "shake," with great unanimity and vigor. Accordingly, at the close of President Harrison's remarks, he was escorted to the main floor and stationed near the north end of the east corridor, where the veterans filed by him, each man stopping to shake his hand, and many of them lingering to recall some experience they had shared together. The scene was an interesting one, and very suggestive to those who witnessed it. Of the nine hundred members of the regiment who shared in the greatest triumph, less than half are now living, and less than one-third were able to attend the annual gathering of the association. In the ordinary course of nature, a few years must reduce the survivors to a meager company, and the introads made upon the members of the association since it began its meetings are painfully apparent. Many of those in the diminished column that filed by the President seemed to realize this, yesterday, and their greeting had a suggestion of leaving-taking in it that was almost pathetic.

When the reception was ended, the President was escorted to the New Denison hotel, with Col. Samuel Merrill in the chair, the business of the association was continued. A large number of committees were appointed to minister to the last meeting held in Clayton, Hendricks county, were read by the secretary, Maj. G. McLean, and after their adoption the association adjourned for a complimentary dinner, served by the ladies of Anderson Post, of the Woman's Relief Corps.

At the afternoon session the reports of officers and committees were heard, and the old board of officers were re-elected. The feature of this session was the annual address, delivered by Col. Samuel Merrill, which was listened to with much interest. The address was mainly historical, and dealt largely with the incidents of interest, serious and humorous, in the history of the regiment. He reminded his hearers, among other things, of the prophecy in the Bible delivered by him at Atlanta, seven years ago, when he spoke of the appreciation of General Harrison by the regiment and the State, and predicted that this appreciation would extend until he would be placed at the head of the mightiest government in the world. Some of the descriptive portions of the address were vivid and striking, and were welcomed with hearty applause.

Other addresses followed, some of them witty and some of them serious, but all of them appropriate and well received. Comrade Morgan reviewed part of the regiment's history and paid an eloquent tribute to some of its deceased members. Comrade Meyer kept his audience in a roar with some quiet observations. Comrade Herbert sang an original song, and comrade Merdith told some good stories.

Following the speaking, there were a few additional reports received. The old officers were re-elected for the coming year. Greenwood was selected as the next place of meeting, and, on motion, the association adjourned to give place to the brigade reunion.

The latter was of brief duration. Owing to the desire of many members of the brigade organization to leave on yesterday evening's trains, the project of a camp-fire last night was given up, and the association contented itself with arranging for next year's business. President Harrison was chosen to preside at the coming year, and the other officers elected were: First vice-president, Daniel Dusk; second vice-president, A. W. Doss; secretary, J. M. Ayers and treasurer, E. H. Conner. With Horace McKee as assistant, Galesburg, Ill., was chosen as the next place of meeting, the time to be announced by the officers-elect.

President Harrison's Departure.

There was quite a considerable gathering at the New Denison yesterday afternoon as the hour announced for President Harrison's departure approached, and the clock of the corridor were filled with those who came to say good-bye. Those who reached the parlors were received without any formality, and the President was kept busy shaking hands until the arrival of the monument, G. A. R. and citizens' committees, at 2:45 P. M., to escort him to the train. The presidential party, diminished by the absence of Secretary Rusk, who went to Milwaukee yesterday morning, consisted of the President, the President's private secretary, Mr. McKee, and other members of the party were distributed in other carriages with the committees.
